Weera gladly takes her in, and Parvana is very worried since the rest of her family is in Mazar. Soon after, her mother becomes depressed and will not move from her toshak (thin mattress). Parvana runs into a girl who she used to go to school with named Shauzia. Despite being against it at first, Parvana grows to accept her sister's decision. Homa's family had been murdered by the Taliban, and she had been extremely lucky to escape. Film adaptation Main article: The Breadwinner (film) The Breadwinner was adapted into an animated film, directed by Nora Twomey, that was released on November 17, 2017.[6] References ^ Parvana - Deborah Ellis - 9781865086941 - Allen & Unwin - Australia ^ About Deborah Ellis Archived 2012-04-15 at the Wayback Machine houseofanansi.com ^ Deborah Ellis: OUP profile Archived 2011-07-19 at the Wayback Machine jubileebooks.co.uk ^ Middle East Book Awards ^ "The Breadwinner series". One day, Parvana's father returns home, but he is in bad shape. ScreenDaily.com. She lives in Simcoe, Ontario. However, the topical issues introduced, coupled with this strong heroine, will make this novel of interest to many conscientious teens. Weera, Homa, and Parvana nurse him back to health, and Parvana and her father leave for Mazar, hidden in the back of a truck, to search for their family in the refugee camps. Children's literature portal Retrieved from " For her research, the author spent several months interviewing women and girls in refugee camps in Pakistan, and used these interviews as the basis of her depiction of life in Afghanistan.[3] The book has received several literary awards, including the Peter Pan Prize and the Middle East Book Award in 2002.[4] The novel was followed by three sequels, Parvana's Journey in 2002, Mud City in 2003, and My Name is Parvana in 2012.[5] Plot Parvana is an 11-year-old girl who lives in Kabul, Afghanistan with her mother Fatima, her father, her bossy older sister Nooria, her cheerful younger sister Maryam and her baby brother Ali. There are some sympathetic moments, as when Parvana sees the effect on her mother when she wears her dead brother's clothes and realizes, while reading a letter for a recently widowed Taliban soldier, that even the enemy can have feelings. Eleven-year-old Parvana must masquerade as a boy to gain access to the outside world and support her dwindling family. In addition, the narrative voice often feels removed ""After the Soviets left, the people who had been shooting at the Soviets decided they wanted to keep shooting at something, so they shot at each other"" taking on a tone more akin to a disquisition than compelling fiction. They come up with an idea of a portable "shop" by using trays to move their wares around. However, the story's tensions sometimes seem forced (e.g., Parvana's own fear of stepping on land mines). Weera. The Taliban laws require women to sheathe themselves fully and ban girls from attending school or going out unescorted; thus, Parvana's disguise provides her a measure of freedom and the means to support her family by providing a reading service for illiterates. Although they were never close in school, they bond trying to figure out ways to earn more money. 29 November 2014. Parvana's brother was killed years earlier by a land mine explosion and, for much of the story, her father is imprisoned, leaving only her mother, older sister and two very young siblings. Shauzia, who had been planning to run away from her family so that she would not have to marry, tells Parvana that she will also be leaving with some nomads. Parvana leads her home at night, and soon the girl, named Homa, tells them that Mazar-e-Sharif has been captured by the Taliban. Here are the three books bound into one handsome volume -- for readers new to Deborah Ellis and for those who would like a collector's edition for their libraries. Ellis (Looking for X) bases her contemporary novel on refugee stories about the oppressive rule of Afghanistan by the Taliban. She throws small gifts onto Parvana's blanket from her window. (Apr.) FYI: All royalties from the sale of the book will be donated to Women for Women in Afghanistan, dedicated to the education of Afghan girls in refugee camps in Pakistan. Nooria announces that she is leaving for Mazar-e-Sharif to marry a boy and to go to college. Eventually, Parvana's mother begins to feel better and joins Mrs. Mrs. This article needs additional citations for verification. Parvana and Shauzia make a pact to meet with each other 20 years later in France, at the top of the Eiffel Tower. She leaves along with her mother and younger siblings, but Parvana stays as she looks like a boy and her appearance will be difficult to explain. Retrieved 20 April 2016.
